PANAMA CANAL ZONE LIBRARY PAMPHLETS

Microfilm 95/8422-95/8566, 93/992-93/1008, (o)93/991-(o)93/992 MicRR

The pamphlets in this collection were part of a large body of material offered to the Library of Congress from the Panama Collection of the Canal Zone Library in 1977. The Canal Zone Library-Museum was established in 1914 serving the Panama Canal Company-Canal Zone Government as an official reference and technical resource library. Prior to the signing of the Canal Zone Treaty in 1977, negotiations began for the transferral of selected holdings of their Panama Collection to the Library of Congress. The Canal Zone Library culled their collection of single copy items, retaining only duplicate items. The collection contained valuable research materials on the history of the Panama Canal, some works on the history of Panama itself, and works on the social life of the residents of the Canal Zone. While the original collection occupied forty eight drawer cabinets, many of the items in this collection were already duplicated in the holdings of the Library of Congress. Those pamphlets felt to be historically important and unique between the two institutions were made available to the Library of Congress, who in turn filmed selected pamphlets for the National Library of Panama. The remaining unique pamphlets were to be incorporated into the general collections of the Library of Congress. These 164 microfilmed pamphlets are some of the more brittle and deteriorating items not reflected in the cataloged collections of the Library of Congress, except within the general rubric of the term Panama Canal Zone Library pamphlets.

The collection was prepared for microfilming in the Preservation Microfilming Office by Carl Peterson with Melvin Mumford coordinating the project under the guidance of Lesia Bodnaruk.
